Sharon worked with my mother and their group of friends always got together for events and to just hang out on weekends and holidays. As the kids, we often spent the night together and did extra curricular activities like skating bowling and going to the movies together. When I look back, I realize that we never went to Sarah's house, but she was always with us. Many times, one parent would keep all of the kids and allow the other parents time to themselves. To be completely honest, I always thought Sarah was spoiled as a child. She got alot of things like being allowed to go to Six Flags and movies in the middle of the week. Just weird things that my own mother would tell me I couldn't do on school days. However, Sharon was and is a very gentle, loving mother. I am willing to say that looking back, though she was terrified of this psycho man she was married to and kept her mouth shut about what was happening, I do believe that she sheltered Sarah and made sure that she was with friends and family often. I think that it is very possible that Sarah did not hear or see anything that happened. All of us felt weird around Ricky, but nothing ever made me think that Sarah was being abused. And for the record, Sharon is only guilty of being in a relationship with an abusive man that convinced her that if she did not help him that he would kill her. I think people need to give her credit for her moment of clarity when she was able to call the authorities despite her fear. I do believe that this book gives a fair depiction of Ricky's childhood and his strange family as I have been told by my own mother. However, Ricky Green was a monster. No one liked him and he made every person he came in contact with uncomfortable by simply being in the room.
